spare parts catalogue at job loss. ~~~ _nalply That's a tricky situation. The information is correct but a lot of people think that you will become unemployed and that you cannot be fired from a job if you are a woman or a man, as you wrote in the article. The social norms are actually opposite to the employment norms. You can't get fired because you are a woman, you will get fired because you are a woman. I'm not sure the correct solution. On the one hand, the above is true, on the other hand it's true that the employer wants to employ a worker that works well and will work hard, and if you are not a good worker it's time to leave. ~~~ abraae > I'm not sure the correct solution. On the one hand, the above is true, on > the other hand it's true that the employer wants to employ a worker that > works well and will work hard, and if you are not a good worker it's time > to leave. This is as it should be. I'm actually curious though, how do you deal with the negative social/employment consequences that follow from making the positive employment benefit gender neutral? The obvious one is the fact that to be employed in one of the working world's most undesirable professions, at least in the western world, is now even less sexy than before. The information being correct in that case - or would it be considered a plus? ----- freetime2 I really don't like it when a journalist doesn't understand technology and is trying to reinvent the wheel. They shouldn't be trying to cover tech. It is amazing how when you describe the equivalent of a scissor lift as a "cart platform" they can have a debate about how it would work in a biological female's body. They should be covering biology and technology. Why did it become acceptable for writers to cover technology? Does everyone need to know what it is? ~~~ aaron695 > I really don't like it when a journalist doesn't understand technology and > is trying to reinvent the wheel.
