A study was made of the nucleoside triphosphate pyrophosphohydrolase activity in cell-free extracts of Pseudomonas putida using two different routes of purification. The cell-free extract was treated with ammonium sulfate, followed by cellulose acetate, Sepharose CL-6B, and phosphocellulose chromatography. The purified enzyme showed a broad substrate specificity, including adenosine, cytidine, uridine, guanosine, deoxythymidine, and inosine, and a more limited specificity for dTTP and dGTP. GTP was not hydrolyzed by the enzyme. The dTTP pyrophosphohydrolase activity was completely inhibited by O-phenanthroline, dithiothreitol, 2-mercaptoethanol, ethylenediaminetetraacetic acid, and diethyl pyrocarbonate. The dTTP pyrophosphohydrolase activity was not inhibited by 10 microM Zn²⁺, and 100 microM Mg²⁺ was required for maximal activity. The Km values obtained for dTTP and dGTP were 0.9 mM and 21.0 microM, respectively, with a Km for Mg²⁺ of 1.4 microM. The enzymatic pyrophosphohydrolase activity was enhanced 1.8-fold by the addition of glutathione-S-transferase to the assay.MANHATTAN, Kan. -(Ammoland.com)- American Defense Inc. (ADI) announced today that the U.S. Army has selected the ARMA III Modern sporting rifle (MSR) to replace the M16A2 service rifle in the U.S. Army infantry as the service rifle is transitioned to the M4 carbine. The M4 is the current service rifle for the U.S. Army. The Army's formal announcement comes as the service rifle transition begins, with the M4 carbine scheduled to replace the M16 in the infantry by 2017, and the M249 SAW by 2018. The U.S. Army Infantry Board issued its final report on
